Phase 1: Data Preparation & Taxonomy Validation

CSCI E-222 · Spring 2026

This notebook covers every step in Phase 1:

1. Taxonomy inspection and label distribution
2. Amazon dataset download and category mapping

3. Preprocessing pipeline validation
4. Stratified train/val/test split
5. Class imbalance analysis and pos_weight computation

Flipkart holdout: loaded and saved here but never inspected for label distribution until final evaluation.

Phase 3: LoRA-Mistral-7B Training (QLoRA, 4-bit)

CSCI E-222 · Spring 2026

Trains a parameter-efficient LoRA adapter on Mistral-7B-Instruct-v0.2 for multi-label product tagging. The backbone is frozen in 4-bit; only LoRA weights (`q_proj` , `v_proj`) and the classification head train.

Expected runtime on A100: 3–6 hrs · Expected peak VRAM: ~18–24 GB

Results are compared directly against the BERT baseline from Phase 2.

Phase 4: Few-Shot LLM API Baseline

Phase 4: Few-Shot LLM API Baseline

CSCI E-222 · Spring 2026

Evaluates GPT-4o-mini and Claude Haiku as zero-training-cost baselines for multi-label product tagging. Both models serve as the OOD fallback in the live pipeline (Phase 5).

This notebook:

1. Inspects the 5-shot prompt
2. Runs both providers on the test set (responses cached to disk)
3. Logs all metrics — same set as Phases 2 & 3 for direct comparison
4. Documents failure modes: hallucinated tags, parse failures, latency variance
5. Estimates per-call cost at scale

1. Inspect the 5-Shot Prompt

Review the prompt before running any API calls.

Phase 5: Model Selector, Orchestrator & Live Demo

CSCI E-222 · Spring 2026

The core contribution of this project: a confidence-calibrated routing layer that assigns each product to the most appropriate model. Results from Phases 2–4 feed directly into the routing policy.

Pipeline flow:

1. Preprocessor — tokenize and clean input
2. BERT inference — initial confidence estimate
3. Model Selector — route based on confidence thresholds
4. Tagger — run the selected model
5. Validator — check tag coverage and confidence floor
